ABOUT 4 TALENTS

4Talents tackles lack of motivation by taking a strategically different approach; it maintains that even if an individual has no formal qualifications, experience has ensured that he or she has already acquired a series of life skills. The program assists in the identification and naming of these skills, enabling the individual to see then a place for him/herself within the employment market from which, they believe, they are excluded. Disadvantaged young adults are a problem modern society often has to face.

Statistics show a clear link between a lack of education on the one hand and unemployment, dependency and poverty on the other. This means that all citizens must constantly update their knowledge and skills through lifelong learning – those, who do not do this, are at risk of social marginalisation. Already existing education and training possibilities for unemployed people, especially for young adults with specific needs, are neither specific nor flexible. They do not respond to the needs of the labour market, nor do they promote personal development.

In this sector of society, one of the main barriers to employment is the lack of motivation. A key action for young people is to clarify their career path, find their strengths and talents to ultimately find a job.

ONLINE AND FACE TO FACE MEETINGS/PILOTINGS

4TALENTS at a GLANCE

As the 4Talents project comes to an end, we wanted to present a 30-month summary.

Thanks to the great co-operation of the consortium, we have carried out our project and now we are close to the end.

Throughout the project period, discussions were held in both online and face-to-face meetings and decisions were taken.

Dedication to the implementation of the project, production, quality, digitisation and sustainability of the results has been demonstrated.

After the completion of the workshops in the piloting workshops (the board games), the feedback received from the participants was evaluated.

The feedback collected from the piloting participants were discussed in Krakow.

We can say with peace of mind that we have produced 3 excellent results for the transformation of disadvantaged youth into advantaged youth.
